A bit about the Brig

The Saltwater Brig is a family owned and run establishment dating from circa 1765 and is named after the bridge closest to it, over the Blackstaff River. At high tide on the Lough, saltwater flows upstream and hence the name. Formerly a coaching house used by travellers, going from the then busy port of Portaferry, to Belfast and beyond. Local legend has it, that, it was also used for more nefarious dealings, that being smuggling. The story goes that ill gotten gains from England and further afield were landed on the Irish sea coast near Cloughey then transferred over land to the brig before setting sail across Strangford Lough, never to be seen again! The wee Chapel next door was used recently as a main set piece in Film director Thaddeus O'Sullivan's adaptation of Sam Hanna Bell's "December Bride".
